DentiMax, Inc. Releases New Dental Software
DentiMax releases its latest version, version '06

Mesa, AZ, March 1, 2006 - DentiMax has released DentiMax '06, the latest upgrade to its dental software. As a recent entrant to the dental market, DentiMax '06 employs a standard modern software design that looks and feels similar to what you would find with a typical Microsoft software product. In addition, DentiMax software has advanced features that include: clinical charting, treatment planning, periodontal charting, PSR exams, prescription writing, electronic claims as well as appointment scheduling with recall. DentiMax also interfaces with over 25 different digital sensors, including Suni, Trophy, Schick, DenOptix, Sirona, Dental Ray, DXIS, and Light Year.

Surprisingly, DentiMax's prices are a fraction of what you would expect. For example, dental offices can choose the $499 single computer version or choose the $3,346 Network Bundle which includes a year of support as well as interactive training CDs.

Lee J. Varney, Co-Founder of DentiMax explains, "Beyond providing dental offices with an easy-to-use full featured program, we believe that dental software does not need to be so expensive. Nearly every other industry has great software at an affordable price, and it seems unfair that professional software in the dental market is priced so high."
